Reasons for the refusal of your application

To help you understand why your application was refused, below are the Officer Decision Notes (ODN) specific to your application as they are displayed in IRCC's system.

These notes were entered by the officer who assessed and made the final decision on your application.

Client is requesting an open work permit in the Start up visa program.

Client entered Canada on 14DEC2022 with a work permit as the CTO for Bringfy and was authorized to remain until 30MAY2025.

Client has submitted documentation including an incorporation certificate, shareholder agreement, and a detailed business plan outlining the company's strategies, market analysis, and operational plan. While these materials demonstrate that the business has been formally established, they do not provide evidence that the business is currently active or operational in Canada.

Despite client's presence in Canada since December 2022, the application lacks credible, verifiable proof of meaningful business activity. There is insufficient evidence of ongoing operations, revenue generation, client engagement, product deployment, staffing of permanent residents or Canadian Citizens, or other indicators of an active enterprise. The documentation provided suggests a business that exists primarily on paper rather than one that is functioning in practice.

Furthermore, the business has not demonstrated a clear or significant economic, social, or cultural benefit to Canada. Bringfy is described as a tech driven delivery platform; however, client has not established why the business must be located in Canada or how its presence benefits Canada. As an online platform, the company has not shown that its operations create substantial benefits beyond what could be achieved from abroad.

In the absence of persuasive evidence of genuine business activity or demonstrable benefit to Canada, the application does not meet the requirements for a work permit under the start up business class provisions.

Officer is not satisfied that client has provided sufficient supporting documentation to establish that they are actively engaging in legitimate business operations in Canada or that their activities provide a significant social, cultural, or economic benefit, as required under IRPR R205(a).

Application refused.
