Monday, October 27th, 2025

To whom it may concern,

I confirm that I previously analyzed the Bringfy Business Plan and, in my capacity as a PMP-certified Project Manager and Business Consultant, provided recommendations that were incorporated to strengthen the plan's scope, schedule, cost, risk, and operational frameworks.

Based on my review and consulting contributions, I affirm that Bringfy's business is feasible in the Canadian market and is grounded in the following:

- Adherence to project management best practices: The plan establishes a clear operational framework (Section 8.0, Operational Plan) and an execution roadmap with defined milestones (Section 24.0, Milestones) and delineated departmental responsibilities, enabling accountable delivery.

- Comprehensive feasibility work: The plan includes a Marketing Analysis (Section 4.0); clearly defined customer segments and personas (Sections 5.0–6.0); a direct competitor assessment (Section 13.0); and a PESTLE analysis (Section 15.0) addressing political, economic, social, technological, legal, and environmental factors in the target regions. This groundwork supports a viable entry and growth path.

- KPIs and performance management: It specifies measurable metrics across acquisition, operations, and financials (Section 7.2, Metrics), enabling data-driven management and continuous improvement.

- Realistic financials: Sales forecasts (Section 18.0), breakeven analysis (Section 19.0), cash flow projections (Section 20.0), and profit and loss statements (Section 21.0) provide a credible view of sustainability and return potential.

- Canadian market integration: The plan references regional estimates (e.g., Durham, Ontario; Section 4.2) and addresses applicable regulations, including the Accessibility for Ontarians with Disabilities Act (AODA) (Section 7.1.1.1), supporting practical implementation in Canada.

In sum, the Bringfy Business Plan reflects professional rigor and incorporates my consulting input. The strategy, operational detail, and market alignment support its feasibility and readiness for implementation and growth in the Canadian market.

Kind regards,

Hayrne Salvanha, PMP
Business Consultant and IPMA Counsellor – International Project Management Association
hsalvanha@gmail.com
+1 437-5512903
linkedin.com/in/hayrne