Hi Ms. Susan,

I hope you are doing well.

Thank you again for your continued attention and support regarding my Startup Visa permanent residence application. I truly appreciate the time and effort your office has already dedicated to my case.

I would like to respectfully ask for your guidance and assistance once more. I apologize for returning to this matter again, but I am currently facing significant professional and personal constraints, and I do not have many remaining options.

Over the past months, pressure has increased substantially from my company partners and investors, who are seeking clarity and stability regarding my immigration status. The prolonged uncertainty is now directly affecting both my professional responsibilities and the continuity of our operations in Canada, and I am effectively stuck without a clear path forward.

To better understand the status of my files, I have submitted multiple ATIP requests. My most recent ATIP request for my permanent residence application was submitted on January 3, 2026, and another ATIP request related to my work permit was submitted on December 10, 2025. As of today, I am still waiting for the release of both ATIP results, which I hope will provide clearer insight into the progress of my applications.

In parallel, my work permit extension application, submitted on March 26, 2025, remains in process well beyond the average processing time. My wife's open work permit extension, submitted on the same date, is also still in process. This situation is becoming increasingly difficult, as my wife's employer is now actively pressing for resolution so she can continue working full time without ongoing uncertainty. These delays are creating employment and compliance concerns that are entirely outside our control.

In addition to the professional impact, the uncertainty surrounding our immigration status is having serious consequences for our family.

My daughter has been unable to proceed with her planned nursing studies, which were intended to be followed by medical school. Without clarity on our status in Canada, she cannot safely enroll or plan her academic future, placing her education on hold indefinitely.

As a brief recap of my current permanent residence situation, based on the most recent information received from IRCC through your office:

- Application received on August 16, 2022
- Eligibility in process
- Criminality passed
- Medical expired, with no new medical request issued
- Application number E002908316
- UCI 1125539388
- Published processing time indicated as 52 months, with an estimated date of December 16, 2026

Throughout last year, I have also proactively submitted multiple webform updates to IRCC to ensure my file remained complete and current. These submissions included updated information regarding our business activities, continued operations in Canada, and a new letter from Ontario Tech University confirming our ongoing participation, progress, and commitment within the incubator program. Despite these updates, there has been no corresponding movement on eligibility review or medical reassessment.

While I understand the published processing time, I am now approaching four years since submission. The lack of progress is creating compounding professional, financial, and family challenges. I remain fully compliant and available to respond immediately to any request from IRCC.

I would also like to respectfully note that my situation reflects broader challenges currently affecting the Canadian startup ecosystem.

There have been recent cases of innovative startups and founders choosing to leave Canada due to prolonged uncertainty, immigration barriers, and difficulty planning long term operations. One widely reported example involved a Gen Z founded technology startup that ultimately relocated its operations to the United States after concluding that the Canadian environment made growth and immigration stability increasingly difficult.

These situations highlight how prolonged uncertainty can result in the loss of innovative businesses, investment, and skilled contributors from Canada.

I fully understand the limitations regarding mandamus proceedings and your office's ability to engage IRCC during such actions. At this stage, I am simply seeking your advice and support on whether any additional follow up, clarification, or internal review might be possible once the next eligible follow up window opens, or if there are any steps you would recommend at this point.

Thank you again for your time, professionalism, and continued assistance. Please let me know if you require any additional information or documentation from my side.

Kind regards,

Olavo Mello
