Business and Commercial Impact

- PR uncertainty limits my ability to negotiate and secure long-term commercial contracts.
- I was unable to fully implement the original business plan after my co-partner was refused entry to Canada.
- Investors are reluctant to commit capital without permanent residence stability.
- Business scaling and expansion plans have been delayed due to immigration risk exposure.
- Strategic planning is constrained to short-term operational timelines because of status uncertainty.
- Partnerships have been missed or postponed due to uncertainty regarding my long-term presence in Canada.
- I cannot confidently enter into multi-year commercial agreements while my immigration status remains unresolved.
- Access to certain government innovation programs is limited or uncertain due to a temporary status.
- Eligibility for funding streams tied to permanent residence is restricted.
- Prolonged temporary status negatively affects credibility with institutional partners and stakeholders.
- Immigration instability creates hesitation among potential collaborators and investors.
- Hiring has been affected because I cannot offer prospective employees long-term organizational stability.
- Immigration uncertainty complicates long-term intellectual property strategy, including trademark and innovation protection planning, due to instability in business permanence and expansion outlook.
- I am unable to travel freely for business or personal purposes due to my actual implied status and concerns regarding re-entry and status continuity while my permanent residence application remains unresolved.

Financial and Operational Impact

- I have incurred repeated legal and immigration related costs due to permit extensions and compliance requirements.

- There is an ongoing risk of employment interruption linked to work permit validity timelines.
- Business continuity planning is directly dependent on the validity of the temporary status.
- Operational decisions must be aligned with work permit expiry dates rather than long-term strategy.
- The delay prevents long-term capital allocation and investment decisions.
- Housing and mortgage eligibility remain uncertain due to a lack of permanent residence.
- I experienced limitations in accessing certain corporate banking services due to my immigration status.

Family and Personal Impact

- My wife’s full-time employment stability has been affected by prolonged implied status periods.
- There is uncertainty regarding my oldest son’s ability to permanently relocate and pursue post-graduation studies in Canada, resulting in difficulty maintaining family unity.
- My daughter’s nursing education and long-term medical school pathway remain uncertain due to unresolved immigration status.
- I experienced interruption or difficulty renewing provincial health coverage, creating stress and concern regarding access to medical care due to unresolved immigration status.